In response to the Corona pandemic, the well-established DSAG congress will take place as an online event. The main focus is on sustainable planning by means of modern technologies. The event aims to highlight how modern end-to-end digitization can help to replace singular business processes and create the basis for sustainable and successful IT infrastructures.

Against this background, the archiving of data and documents created in this context plays an important role, as this forms a key component of business-critical processes and must meet a wide range of compliance requirements. kgs will be demonstrating at their virtual exhibition stand how modern archiving solutions can help and what they are capable of doing beyond traditional data storage.

Whether it's videos, presentations or best-practice examples – the participants of DSAGLIVE will have many opportunities to learn more about kgs's intelligent archiving solutions. Visitors will even be able to engage in “trade fair talks” with kgs representatives, who will be available to virtual visitors for discussions via online chat throughout the event.

There is also a kgs download area that provides user reports, info brochures and white papers.

The various lectures and presentations are also being eagerly awaited – not least the keynote “Digital wake-up call” by Christian Klein.
